On 23 August, authorities in the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia opened its southern border with Greece allowing the crossing of 5,000 refugees and migrants. Long queues formed as local authorities processed their papers to legalise their transit north and transport was organised to take them to the border with Serbia. In Presevo, on the Serbian side, the Ministry of the Interior registered 2,000 persons at the reception centre during the weekend.

Greece has received 182,535 maritime arrivals between January and mid-August 2015 (UNHCR, 21 August).

European Commission’s Emergency Response Coordination Centre (ERCC) is closely monitoring the evolving situation and has been in contact with national civil protection authorities in the respective countries.
