Despite daily admissions to Jordan, a large number of people remain stranded along the northeast border area between Jordan and Syria—the Berm—as population displacement continues taking place in several parts of Syria. According to estimates from Jordanian authorities, 54 800 asylum seekers are at the border area.

UNHCR prepares lists of asylum seekers who need priority entry to Jordan due to their vulnerable conditions. These are shared with the Jordanian Border Guards. The number of admissions from the border to the registration centre at Raba'a Al-Sarhan remained constant at 100 per day until the beginning of April when it increased to 200-250 per day, a rate which is expected to continue.

On 14 April, Government sources reported that 298 asylum seekers had been transported to Raba'a Al-Sarhan before transfer to the Azraq refugee camp. Since the beginning of the month, 4 899 persons have arrived in the Village 5 of Azraq camp; where they have received shelter, food, non-food items and health services. Village 5 has a capacity to host up to 12 500 refugees in 3 122 shelters.

Meanwhile at the berm, the provision of food, water and medical assistance continues; although the authorized hours for health staff to work at the border is not enough to assist all those in need. Humanitarian organizations have asked Jordanian authorities to allow for extended work hours and authorize medical staff to overnight at the Ruqban service area.
